

TF 1: You are being interviewed for a documentary about the role of sports in society. The interviewer will now ask you some questions.

Q-1: Thinking back, did you prefer playing individual sports or team sports when you were younger? Please explain why.

Answer:

When I was younger, I preferred playing team sports. I liked them because they allowed me to share ideas and strategies with my teammates. It was a great way to communicate and work together towards a common goal. Also, playing on a team helped us make memorable times with each other. We laughed a lot and supported one another during the games. These social interactions made the sport much more enjoyable for me than playing alone.

Q-2: Some people argue that professional athletes are paid too much money, while others believe their high salaries are justified. What is your opinion?

Answer:

I believe the high salaries of professional athletes are justified. These athletes work harder than most people because they spend a high portion of their lives training. They have to make many sacrifices and dedicate themselves fully to become successful. Since their careers are often short and involve intense physical effort, I think they deserve to be rewarded for their hard work and dedication.

Q-3: What are two specific ways that schools can encourage students who are not naturally athletic to participate more in physical activities?

Answer:

There are two specific ways schools can encourage students who are not naturally athletic. First, schools can offer fun activities like yoga or dancing instead of competitive sports. This allows students to enjoy movement without the pressure of winning. Second, schools can focus on group games where everyone participates, regardless of their skill level. This creates a supportive environment where students feel comfortable and motivated to join in without fear of being judged.

Q-4: With the rapid growth of e-sports, or competitive video gaming, what is one positive and one negative impact on traditional sports?

Answer:

One positive impact is that e-sports can introduce traditional sports to a younger audience. For example, video games about soccer or basketball might encourage fans to play the real sports. However, a negative impact is that e-sports might make people less physically active. Since gaming is sedentary, it could lead to health problems and cause fewer people to participate in actual physical sports.

TF 2: You are being interviewed for a study on the impact of documentary films. A researcher will now begin with the first question.

Q-1: To begin, do you think documentary films are a good way to learn about historical events? Why or why not?

Answer:

Yes, I think documentary films are a great way to learn about history. They use real videos and photos to make events feel real, which is much more interesting than reading a textbook. Seeing the actual places and people helps me understand the story better. Also, experts often explain the details clearly. This visual method helps me remember information more easily. So, I believe documentaries are a very effective and enjoyable way to study history.

Q-2: Would you rather watch a documentary about the natural world and wildlife or one about the life of a famous historical figure? Explain your choice

Answer:

I would rather watch a documentary about the natural world and wildlife. I really love animals, so seeing them in nature is very interesting for me. Documentaries about famous people can sometimes be boring or serious. However, nature films are beautiful and relaxing. They also teach us why we should protect the environment. I enjoy watching the amazing views of the earth and learning about different animals. It is much more enjoyable for me than history.

Q-3: Some documentaries can be biased. What are two things a viewer can do to make sure they are getting an accurate and balanced perspective on a topic?

Answer:

There are two things viewers can do to get the truth. First, they should watch documentaries from different sources. By comparing them, they can see different sides of the story. Second, they can check the facts on the internet. Reading articles from trusted experts helps them verify if the information is correct. This way, they can know if the documentary is biased and form their own opinion.

Q-4: As streaming services produce more documentaries, how might this trend positively and negatively affect the public's understanding of complex social issues?

Answer:

This trend has both good and bad effects. On the positive side, more people can learn about social issues because documentaries are easy to watch on streaming services. This helps raise awareness. However, on the negative side, some documentaries might show only one side of the story to be more entertaining. This can confuse people or give them the wrong idea. So, while it is good for learning, viewers should be careful to check if the information is true.

TF 3: You are participating in a study about university learning environments. An interviewer will ask you some questions.

Q-1: To begin, do you prefer to study for exams alone or with a group of classmates? Why?

Answer:

I prefer to study for exams with a group of classmates. Studying together allows us to share our ideas and opinions, and we can explain difficult concepts to each other. This makes learning much easier. Also, it is very enjoyable because we can speak and make jokes, which keeps the atmosphere fun. In contrast, studying alone is something boring for me. I find it hard to stay motivated when I am by myself, so group study is definitely better.

Q-2: Some universities focus on traditional lectures, while others emphasize hands-on projects. Which teaching approach do you believe is more effective?

Answer:

I believe the hands-on approach is more effective. Traditional methods focus more on theories, and while they are essential, they only provide basic knowledge. Students should better learn some practical skills for their future careers. Furthermore, hands-on projects help students understand concepts better. For example, I might learn the theory of a chemical reaction in books, but in the lab, I can understand their applications better. This practical experience makes the knowledge much clearer and more useful for real life.

Q-3: Many students struggle with time management during their studies. What are two practical strategies you would suggest for managing academic workloads?

Answer:

There are two practical strategies I would suggest for managing academic workloads. First, using apps is very helpful. Students can use them to set reminders for important deadlines and meetings so they do not miss them. Second, writing daily tasks on paper is effective. Crossing off completed tasks makes me happy and helps me stay motivated and focused on my duties. This feeling of accomplishment encourages me to work harder.

Q-4: With the rise of online educational resources, how might the role of university libraries change in both positive and negative ways?

Answer:

The role of university libraries might change in both positive and negative ways. On the positive side, libraries will become digital hubs where students can easily access online resources from anywhere. This makes research much faster and more convenient. However, on the negative side, the physical library might lose its importance as a social space. If students stop visiting the library to study in groups, they might miss out on face-to-face discussions and the quiet atmosphere that helps them focus.

TF 4: You are being interviewed by a food magazine for an article about contemporary eating habits. The interviewer will now ask you some questions.

Q-1: First, when you have a choice, do you prefer to cook a meal at home or eat out at a restaurant? Why?

Answer:

It depends on who I am with. When I am with my friends, I prefer eating out at a restaurant. After working hard, I would rather relax than do activities like cooking and cleaning at home. However, when I am with my family, I prefer to cook a meal at home. This allows us to get together and make memorable time with each other. Cooking together is a great way for us to bond and enjoy quality time.

Q-2: Would you rather spend money on a very expensive meal at a famous restaurant or on high-quality ingredients to cook many meals at home?

Answer:

I would rather spend money on high-quality ingredients to cook many meals at home. It is widely accepted that cooking at home is cheaper than eating at a restaurant. This allows me to save money and spend it on other purposes like buying clothes. Furthermore, cooking at home with high-quality ingredients is healthier than eating at a restaurant. It helps me improve my physical health because I know exactly what is in my food.

Q-3: Many people rely on fast food due to busy schedules. Can you suggest two practical ways for people to maintain a healthier diet despite being busy?

Answer:

There are two practical ways to maintain a healthier diet despite being busy. First, people can do meal preparation on weekends. By cooking meals in advance and storing them, they can eat healthy food during the week without spending time cooking every day. Second, they can keep healthy snacks like fruits or nuts at hand. This helps them avoid eating fast food when they are hungry and busy, ensuring they get the nutrition they need.

Q-4: How do you think the growing popularity of international food chains might positively and negatively affect a country's local food culture?

Answer:

The growing popularity of international food chains can affect local food culture in both positive and negative ways. Positively, it introduces people to new flavors and cuisines, which can make dining more exciting. However, negatively, it might cause people to forget their traditional dishes. If people rely too much on international chains, local restaurants might close, and the unique food culture of the country could slowly disappear. Therefore, while it offers variety, it can threaten local traditions.

TF 5: Your local public library is conducting a survey on how people read today. You will be interviewed about your reading preferences.

Q-1: Do you prefer to read fiction books for their stories or to read non-fiction books for information? Please explain your choice.

Answer:

My preference has changed over time. When I was a child, I preferred fiction books because they were enjoyable. For example, I really liked reading comic books. However, nowadays I prefer non-fiction books because I want to get valuable information. I believe reading non-fiction helps me learn new things and gain knowledge that is useful for my life and career.

Q-2: In your view, is it a better experience to read a traditional, physical book or to use an e-reader or other digital device?

Answer:

In my view, using an e-reader or digital device is a better experience. E-books allow me to carry several heavy books in just a tablet or laptop, which is very convenient. They also offer several options, such as highlighting important sentences and opening up several books at the same time. These features make me stay focused and motivated, and they encourage me to study more.

Q-3: Many people say that they simply do not have enough time to read books regularly. What are two practical tips to help them read more?

Answer:

There are two practical tips to help people read more. First, they can use apps on their mobile phones. Whenever they want to relax or have free time, they can read books instead of surfing the net or checking social media. Second, they can make a plan to study for at least 30 minutes before bed or in the evening. This strategy enforces a habit and ensures they read every day.

Q-4: As audiobooks become more popular, how might this trend positively impact busy people but negatively affect the business of traditional bookstores?

Answer:

The rise of audiobooks can have both positive and negative effects. Positively, it impacts busy people by allowing them to listen to books while they are working. This helps them get valuable information from books without having to sit down and read. Negatively, it affects traditional bookstores because people are less likely to buy physical books. If everyone prefers digital audio formats, bookstores may lose customers and struggle to stay in business.

TF 6: You have agreed to participate in a short interview for a university study on how people consume news.

Q-1: How do you usually get your news, for example, from television, social media, or online newspapers? Why?

Answer:

I usually get my news from different sources depending on the topic. For sports news, I check several websites and online news sources. For politics, I prefer watching TV because it helps me understand what is happening in my country and other countries more clearly. However, for public news like the weather or environmental issues, I think social media platforms like Instagram are the best source since they provide instant updates.

Q-2: Some people prefer detailed, long-form news articles, while others prefer short, quick news summaries. Which format do you find more useful?

Answer:

I find short, quick news summaries more useful. I have a busy schedule due to my work and study, so I do not have enough time to watch and evaluate different news stories. Therefore, short news is a practical option for me to understand what is happening around the world without spending too much time.

Q-3: With so much information available today, it can be difficult to identify reliable news sources. What are two things people can do?

Answer:

There are two things people can do to identify reliable news sources. First, they can watch news from different sources and then compare them. This helps them get correct information and find a reliable source. Second, they can search on the news and read good articles from experts. This allows them to analyze the information and finally find correct data

Q-4: As more news consumption moves online, what is one positive and one negative impact this trend could have on local communities?

Answer:

One positive impact is that people can easily access a wide range of information faster and better. They can understand what is happening around the world in the shortest time and learn about different cultures and traditions. However, a negative impact is that they cannot always find reliable news. With so much information online, it can be difficult to know what is true and what is false.

TF 7: A journalism student is interviewing people about their news consumption habits. You have agreed to answer a few questions.

Q-1: Do you prefer to get your daily news from traditional sources like TV, or from online platforms and social media? Why?

Answer:

I usually get my news from different sources depending on the topic. For sports news, I check several websites and online news sources. For politics, I prefer watching TV because it helps me understand what is happening in my country and other countries more clearly. However, for public news like the weather or environmental issues, I think social media platforms like Instagram are the best source since they provide instant updates.

Q-2: Which do you believe is more important for news reporting: to be fast and immediate, or to be slowly and thoroughly checked for accuracy?

Answer:

I believe that news should be fast and immediate. Because I have a busy schedule due to my work and study, so I do not have enough time to watch and evaluate different news stories. Therefore, short news is a practical option for me to understand what is happening around the world without spending too much time.

Q-3: The spread of false information, or "fake news," online is a serious issue. What are two things individuals can do to avoid being misled?

Answer:

There are two things people can do to identify reliable news sources. First, they can watch news from different sources and then compare them. This helps them get correct information and find a reliable source. Second, they can search on the news and read good articles from experts. This allows them to analyze the information and finally find correct data

Q-4: As news becomes more personalized by algorithms, what is one positive effect for the user and one negative effect for society as a whole?

Answer:

One positive effect is that people can find their favorite news more easily and access it faster. Algorithms show users content that matches their interests, which saves time. However, a negative effect for society is that people might only see one side of a story. This can create a divided society where people are not exposed to different opinions or important global issues.

TF 8: You are being interviewed by your local historical society about the importance of preserving community history.

Q-1: First, do you enjoy visiting historical sites like old buildings or famous landmarks? Please explain why.

Answer:

Yes, I really enjoy visiting historical sites like old buildings and famous landmarks. They show the identity and culture of the local community. These places represent the skill of the people and their traditions. By visiting them, we can understand the history of a place and appreciate the hard work and artistry of past generations.

Q-2: Is it more important for a city to construct new, modern buildings or to preserve its old, historic ones?

Answer:

I believe it is more important for a city to preserve its old, historic ones. Preserving these places helps people understand their tradition and culture, and they show the identity and skill of the local community. They are also reliable sources for the younger generation to learn about past generations. Furthermore, it is economically beneficial because historic sites attract tourists. This brings money into the city and supports the local economy.

Q-3: Preserving old buildings is often very expensive. Suggest two ways a community could raise money to maintain its important historic sites.

Answer:

There are two ways a community could raise money to maintain historic sites. First, the government could implement a specific tax. For example, a small tax on property or tickets could generate funds for preservation. Second, they can focus on tourists. Since historic sites attract many visitors, the community can charge entrance fees or sell souvenirs to tourists. This revenue can be used directly to repair and maintain the old buildings.

Q-4: Looking ahead, how might virtual reality tours positively and negatively affect people's desire to visit physical historical locations in person?

Answer:

Virtual reality tours can affect tourism in both good and bad ways. On the positive side, they can make people interested in history. Seeing a site on a screen might encourage them to visit it in real life later. However, on the negative side, some people might not want to travel anymore. If they can see everything from their home, they might feel there is no need to visit the actual place. This could reduce the number of tourists going to historical sites.

TF 9: You are participating in a focus group for your city's planning department. An interviewer will ask for your opinions on urban life.

Q-1: To begin, what is one thing that you particularly like about the city or town where you currently live? Please explain.

Answer:

I live in Tabriz, and one thing I particularly like about it is the effective and affordable public transportation system. It allows me to go wherever I want without relying on my private car. This is very convenient for me. Additionally, it helps me save both money and time. I can use the money I save for other purposes and spend my time more productively instead of dealing with traffic or looking for parking.

Q-2: Do you think cities should invest more money in developing modern entertainment venues or in expanding public parks and green spaces?

Answer:

I think cities should invest more money in expanding public parks and green spaces. These areas help physical health by encouraging people to do activities like walking and jogging. They also improve mental health. Even a short walk after a hard day can reduce stress and anxiety. It refreshes the mind and helps people return to their work with better mindsets. Therefore, parks are essential for the well-being of city residents.

Q-3: Heavy traffic congestion is a major problem in many large urban centers. Please suggest two distinct solutions that a city could implement.

Answer:

One solution is to improve public transportation systems and reduce their costs. This will encourage people to use them instead of using their private cars. Another solution is to implement a specific tax on using private cars. This would encourage people to use bicycles for short distances and buses or subways for long trips. These measures can significantly reduce traffic congestion in the city.

Q-4: In the future, more people may work from home permanently. How might this trend positively and negatively change the downtown areas of cities?

Answer:

This trend could change downtown areas in both positive and negative ways. Positively, it can reduce traffic congestion in cities, which can reduce pollutants and improve air quality. However, negatively, if fewer people commute to downtown offices for work, local businesses like restaurants and coffee shops might lose customers. This could lead to economic problems for the city center and make the area less lively.

TF 10: A human resources firm is researching modern work culture. You have volunteered to be interviewed about your views on professional life.

Q-1: When you think about a future career, is having a high salary or having job satisfaction more important to you? Please explain.

Answer:

For me, having a high salary is more important than job satisfaction. Financial security allows me to live a comfortable life and support my family. A high salary helps me pay for good housing, healthcare, and education. It also gives me the freedom to enjoy my hobbies and travel when I am not working. While enjoying the job is nice, I believe that being financially stable reduces stress and provides a solid foundation for a happy life.

Q-2: Would you prefer a job that offers a flexible schedule but potentially longer hours, or one with a strict 9-to-5 schedule?

Answer:

I would prefer a job that offers a flexible schedule. It helps me manage my time more effectively. I can solve projects and problems freely without feeling pressure. Also, working flexibly helps me gain new ideas and find new ways to complete projects on time. I believe that having control over my schedule makes me more productive and creative than a strict 9-to-5 routine.

Q-3: Many employees experience burnout from being overworked and stressed. What are two policies a company could introduce to help prevent this problem?

Answer:

There are two policies a company could introduce to help prevent burnout. First, they could offer several beneficial options such as financial help and paid time off. This allows employees to travel and enjoy their hobbies without working. Second, they could allow employees to work remotely from home. This helps them spend more time with their families, which reduces stress and anxiety. It refreshes their mind so they can return to work with a positive mindset.

Q-4: The idea of having a single career for life is becoming less common. What is one positive and one negative consequence of this societal shift?

Answer:

One positive consequence is that people can learn new skills and gain diverse experiences, which makes them more adaptable. Changing careers allows individuals to find a job that truly suits their interests. However, a negative consequence is the lack of job security. Frequently changing jobs can lead to financial instability and stress, as people may not always have a steady income or long-term benefits like a pension.

TF 11: You have volunteered for a university study about modern reading habits. An interviewer will ask you some questions.

Q-1: Thank you for participating. First, do you prefer reading for information or for entertainment, and why?

Answer:

My preference has changed over time. When I was a child, I preferred reading fiction books for entertainment, like comic books, because they made me happy and were enjoyable. However, now I prefer reading non-fiction books for information. I believe that gaining knowledge and learning new facts is more important for my growth and future career than just reading for fun.

Q-2: Now, some people prefer physical books, while others prefer e-books. Which format do you find better and why?

Answer:

I find e-books to be better. They allow me to carry several books in just one tablet or laptop, which is very convenient. They also offer several options, like the ability to open several books at the same time and highlight important sentences. These features help me stay focused and motivated. They encourage me to study more effectively rather than wasting time.

Q-3: Many people find it difficult to make time for reading. What are two practical ways to encourage busy adults to read more often?

Answer:

There are two practical tips to help people read more. First, they can use apps on their mobile phones. Whenever they want to relax or have free time, they can read books instead of surfing the net or checking social media. Second, they can make a plan to study for at least 30 minutes before bed or in the evening. This strategy enforces a habit and ensures they read every day.

Q-4: Looking ahead, how might the decline of physical bookstores positively and negatively impact local communities in the future?

Answer:

The decline of physical bookstores has both positive and negative effects. On the positive side, buying books online is often cheaper and easier for people. However, there are negative effects too. Bookstores are important social places where people meet and attend events. If they close, communities lose these cultural spaces. This means people will have fewer places to gather and interact with each other, which can hurt the local community spirit.

TF 12: You are participating in a survey for the city planning department about public spaces. You will now be asked a few questions.

Q-1: To begin, do you prefer spending your free time outdoors in a park or indoors? Please explain why.

Answer:

I prefer spending my free time outdoors in a park. Being in nature allows me to breathe fresh air and enjoy green spaces, which helps refresh my mind and reduce stress and anxiety. Also, it improves my mood and physical health. I can do activities like walking and jogging, which keep me fit. Overall, spending time in a park makes me feel much better than staying indoors.

Q-2: Should a city invest its budget in large, central parks or in smaller neighborhood gardens scattered throughout the city? Why?

Answer:

I think a city should invest in smaller neighborhood gardens scattered throughout the city. This allows most people to access green spaces easily, which leads to increased physical health because these gardens encourage people to do activities like walking and jogging. Also, having many small gardens helps improve air quality throughout the city. Trees can absorb carbon dioxide and release oxygen, which improves the air quality for everyone living in the city.

Q-3: Urban parks sometimes face problems with litter and vandalism. What are two effective ways a city can address these issues?

Answer:

There are two effective ways a city can address these issues. First, they can install more security cameras and increase police patrols. This will make people afraid to vandalize property because they know they are being watched. Second, the city can place more trash bins and organize regular clean-up events. If there are enough bins and people see the community taking care of the park, they will be less likely to throw litter on the ground.

Q-4: If cities invest heavily in technology for public spaces, how might this positively and negatively affect the community experience?

Answer:

Investing in technology in public spaces can have both positive and negative effects. Positively, it can make the experience more convenient and enjoyable. For example, free Wi-Fi and smart information kiosks can help visitors access information easily. However, negatively, it might reduce social interaction. If people are focused on their screens or using digital devices, they might talk to each other less. This could weaken the sense of community and make the spaces feel less personal.

TF 13: You are taking part in an interview about the future of work for a business research organization.

Q-1: Would you personally prefer a job that allows you to work from home, or one in a traditional office? Why?

Answer:

I would personally prefer a job that allows me to work from home. First, it helps me save money because I don't need to spend money on commuting to my workplace. I can use that money for other purposes. Second, it helps me save time. Since I don't have to drive or take public transport, I can use that extra time to rest or be more productive.

Q-2: Some argue that remote work increases employee productivity, while others claim it damages team collaboration. Which viewpoint do you agree with more?

Answer:

I agree with the viewpoint that remote work increases employee productivity. It helps employees save time and spend it on their projects, allowing them to complete tasks before deadlines. Also, it increases their freedom. They can manage their time and solve problems without feeling pressure from their bosses. For example, I can find new ways to complete a project whenever I feel free, which makes me work more efficiently.

Q-3: Working from home for a long time can lead to feelings of professional isolation. Suggest two ways companies can help their remote employees.

Answer:

There are two ways companies can help remote employees feel less isolated. First, they can set up regular video call meetings. This allows employees to see their colleagues and interact face-to-face, which helps maintain social connections. Second, companies can organize online virtual team-building activities or social events. These events give employees a chance to chat and have fun together outside of work tasks, which helps build a sense of community.

Q-4: If remote work becomes the standard for many jobs, what is one positive and one negative effect this could have on large city centers?

Answer:

One positive effect is that it will reduce the number of cars and traffic, which improves air quality in the city. However, a negative effect is that local businesses like restaurants and coffee shops might lose their customers. Since fewer people are commuting to the office, these businesses could suffer. This can have bad economic effects on local businesses and hurt the city's economy.

AD 1: You are taking part in a research study about family life and personal relationships. You will have a short online interview with a researcher. The researcher will ask you a few questions.

Q-1: Thank you for joining this study. We're exploring people's views and experiences related to family life. I'd like to ask you a few questions. First, how would you describe your family structure? For example, who do you live with or who do you consider to be part of your immediate family?

Answer:

I live with my parents and my sister. We are a small, traditional family. I consider them my immediate family because we spend most of our time together. We support each other every day and share our lives in the same house. Being close to them is very important to me.

Q-2: That's a good place to start. Families come in all shapes and sizes and each one has its own dynamic. What are some values or habits that are important in your family, such as how you spend time together or handle responsibilities?

Answer:

In my family, respect and communication are the most important values. We make it a habit to have dinner together every evening to share our stories and discuss our day. We also believe in sharing responsibilities. For example, everyone helps with household chores like cooking or cleaning. This teaches us to be responsible and supportive of one another.

Q-3: Family relationships can bring both support and challenges. What do you think helps maintain strong and healthy family relationships? And on the other hand, what do you think causes tension or distance between family members?

Answer:

I think several things help maintain strong family relationships. Supporting each other, communicating openly, showing respect, and always telling the truth are essential. These habits build trust and understanding. On the other hand, telling lies causes tension and distance between family members. When someone is dishonest, it breaks the trust and makes it hard for the family to feel connected or safe with one another.

Q-4: One last question. As society changes, family roles and expectations also evolve. For example, some people live far apart or communicate mostly online. Do you think the definition of family is changing in today's world? Why or why not, and do you see that change as positive, negative or both?

Answer:

AD 2: You are participating in a study about access to university education and its role in personal and professional growth. You will have a short online interview with a researcher.

Q-1: Thanks for being here. This interview is about access to higher education and how students experience academic pressure. I'd like to start with this. What made you decide to attend university in the first place? Was it something you always planned to do, or did it take time to make that decision? And how did your family or personal background influence your choice? Was it a smooth path, or were there obstacles to overcome?

Answer:

From my childhood, I planned to attend university because I can build a strong network and meet many professors. This can broaden my perspective and open up more job opportunities to find a good job. However, the path was not smooth. I faced many difficulties, but my family always encouraged me to study harder to become a successful person. Their support helped me overcome the obstacles and stay focused on my goals.

Q-2: On the other hand, university isn't just about stress. It's also a time of learning and opportunity. In your opinion, what is the main purpose of going to university? Is it primarily to prepare for a job, to grow as a person, to build social networks, or something else? And since you began your studies, has your view of what university is for changed in any way?

Answer:

At first, I believed going to university was just for finding a good job and gaining strong knowledge. However, now I think universities can also help build a strong network. This experience can broaden my perspective and teach life skills like communication and teamwork. These skills are beneficial for real-world challenges. So, my view has changed from just focusing on a career to seeing university as a place for personal growth and social development.

Q-3: Many students say they feel pressure to succeed, whether it's keeping up with grades, managing student debt, or meeting high expectations from family or society. Have you personally experienced stress related to academic performance or the cost of education? If so, how do you usually deal with those pressures, and what has helped you the most in staying balanced?

Answer:

Yes, I have personally experienced stress related to academic performance. I feel pressure to get good grades and become my family's pride. To deal with this, I break my goals into smaller steps. This strategy helps me stay motivated and focused, and allows me to see my progress better. Sometimes, I also take short breaks to refresh my mind and clear negative mindsets. These habits help me stay balanced.

Q-4: Final question. Some people believe that universities should be more affordable and inclusive so that more people can access the benefits of higher education. Do you agree with this idea? Why or why not? And in your view, what specific steps could be taken by governments, institutions, or society as a whole to make higher education more accessible for all?

Answer:

Yes, I totally agree with this idea. Making universities more affordable allows people to compete in a fair area to get good job opportunities and broaden their perspectives. To make higher education more accessible, the government can offer some scholarships for good students. Also, institutions can support students by providing internships and financial aid. These steps would help more people access the benefits of higher education without worrying about the cost.

AD 3: You are participating in a research study about travel habits and personal experiences. You will have a short online interview with a researcher. The researcher will ask you a few questions.

Q-1: Thank you for joining the study. We're exploring how people travel and what travel means to them. I'll ask you a few questions to learn more about your experiences and opinions. Let's start with this. When was the last time you traveled somewhere, either within your country or abroad, and what was the purpose of the trip?

Answer:

The last time I traveled was when I went to Shomal, which is a city in my country, Iran. The purpose of the trip was for a holiday. We spent time speaking to each other and swimming in the sea, which made a memorable time for us. The weather was sunny and enjoyable, so we had a great time relaxing together.

Q-2: That sounds memorable. Travel can be relaxing, educational, or even life-changing. What do you enjoy most about traveling? And do you prefer visiting familiar places or exploring new and unfamiliar destinations? Why?

Answer:

I think traveling is mostly for relaxing and enjoying. I prefer to travel with my family and friends because we can share our stories and make memorable times with each other. I also prefer exploring unfamiliar places rather than familiar ones. Visiting new destinations is exciting because I can see different cultures and beautiful views. It helps me refresh my mind and escape from my daily routine. Overall, exploring new places with loved ones is the best way to travel.

Q-3: These days, more people are thinking about sustainable tourism, like supporting local businesses, minimizing environmental impact, or avoiding over-tourism. Is that something you consider when planning a trip? Why or why not?

Answer:

Yes, I definitely consider sustainable tourism when planning a trip. It is important to support local businesses because it helps the local economy grow. Also, minimizing environmental impact is crucial to protect nature for the future. I try to avoid over-tourism by visiting less crowded places. This way, I can enjoy the trip without damaging the environment or disturbing the local community.

Q-4: One last question. As technology changes the way we plan and experience travel through apps, virtual tours, or online reviews, do you think the meaning of travel is changing? Why or why not?

Answer:

I think the meaning of travel is changing because of technology. Apps and virtual tours make it easier to plan trips and see new places without leaving home. However, I believe real travel is about physical experiences. Technology helps us prepare, but it cannot replace the feeling of being in a new place. So, while technology changes how we travel, the main purpose of exploring the world and relaxing remains the same.

AD 4: You are taking part in a research study about solo travel. You will have a short online interview with a researcher, who will ask you several questions about your travel experiences and opinions.

Q-1: Thanks for being here today. This study is focused on solo travel and how people experience independence while exploring new places. I'd like to ask you a few questions about your personal experiences or views on the topic. To begin, have you ever traveled alone before? If yes, what made you decide to do it, and where did you go? If not, is it something you've ever considered doing in the future, and what appeals to you about the idea?

Answer:

Yes, I have traveled alone several times. The last time was two years ago when I went to Shomal, which is a famous city in my country. I visited a famous forest there. In fact, I wanted to breathe some fresh air and refresh my mind. I wanted to escape from the hustle and bustle of city life so I could return to work and study with a positive mindset.

Q-2: Some travelers describe solo trips as empowering, offering a deep sense of freedom and self-discovery. Others, however, find the experience isolating or logistically challenging. How do you personally feel about traveling alone? In your view, what are some of the greatest rewards and what are the most common difficulties?

Answer:

I personally feel that traveling alone is a very empowering experience. The greatest reward is the freedom to do whatever you want without waiting for others. It allows for self-discovery and helps you become more independent. However, the most common difficulty is feeling lonely at times. It can also be logistically challenging because you have to manage everything, like navigation and safety, by yourself without anyone to help you.

Q-3: Traveling solo often means handling everything from transportation to safety on your own. When you travel by yourself, or imagine doing so, how do you prepare to feel secure, confident, and ready for the unexpected? Are there specific habits, tools, or routines you use to help your trip go smoothly?

Answer:

To feel secure when traveling solo, I always plan my accommodation and transportation in advance. I use apps on my phone to check maps and read reviews about safe places. I also keep a copy of my important documents online. These habits help me feel confident and ready for the unexpected. Being prepared allows me to enjoy my trip without worrying, so I can focus on exploring new places and having a great time.

Q-4: Final question. Many people say everyone should try solo travel at least once to build independence and expand their perspective. Do you agree with that? Why or why not? And how do you think experiencing a place alone might change the way someone understands the world and themselves?

Answer:

Yes, I agree that everyone should try solo travel at least once. It helps you become independent because you have to solve problems by yourself. Also, it expands your perspective because you see new things without anyone else's influence. When you travel alone, you learn more about yourself and what you like. It makes you stronger and more confident. I think it changes how you see the world because you pay closer attention to everything around you.

AD 5: You have agreed to take part in a research study about people's vacation habits. You will have a short online interview with a researcher. The researcher will ask you some questions.

Q-1: Thank you for joining me today. I'm conducting a study about how people plan and experience vacations. I'd like to ask you a few questions. Let's start with something simple. When was the last time you took a vacation and where did you go? Was it a short weekend trip or something more extended?

Answer:

Last year, my family and I traveled to Shomal, a beautiful region in northern Iran. We spent our time exploring the lush jungle and swimming in the sea. It was a short trip of only three days, but it was absolutely fascinating. We really enjoyed making memorable memories together. I certainly hope we can visit there again next year.

Q-2: That sounds great. Now people go on vacation for many different reasons. Some want to relax and unwind, others seek adventure, and some are looking to spend time with family or discover new cultures. What does an ideal vacation look like for you? And why do you think that kind of break appeals to you?

Answer:

For me, an ideal vacation is all about relaxing and spending quality time with my family. I prefer visiting places like jungles or the sea to refresh my mind and reduce stress. This helps me return to my studies and work with a positive mindset. Also, because of technology, we rarely spend time together. Therefore, a vacation is the perfect opportunity for us to connect and create lasting memories.

Q-3: Let's talk a bit about how you prepare. Some people enjoy planning every detail, booking activities in advance, researching places to eat, while others prefer to take it day by day. How do you usually plan your vacations and how does that approach affect your experience?

Answer:

I usually plan my accommodation and transportation in advance. I use several apps on my phone, like Google Maps, for navigation and read reviews to find safe places. This organized approach helps me enjoy my trip without worrying about unexpected situations. By preparing the important details early, I can feel more relaxed and focus entirely on having fun and exploring new places during my vacation.

Q-4: One final question. These days, people often say that vacations aren't just a luxury, but a way to maintain good mental health and work-life balance. Do you agree that taking time off is essential? Why or why not? And what do you think would happen if people didn't take breaks?

Answer:

I completely agree that taking time off is essential. Vacations help reduce stress and anxiety, improving our mood and energy. This allows us to return to work with a positive mindset. If people do not take breaks, they might feel tired and overwhelmed. Consequently, their efficiency will decrease, and they could face serious health issues. Therefore, regular rest is necessary for maintaining a good work-life balance.

AD 6: You have agreed to take part in a research study about how weather affects people's daily lives. You will have a short online interview with a researcher. The researcher will ask you some questions.

Q-1: Thank you for speaking with me today. I'm conducting a study about how people experience and respond to different kinds of weather. I'd like to ask you a few questions. First, what type of weather do you enjoy the most, and why? How does it typically influence your mood, your energy, or your activities?

Answer:

I definitely enjoy sunny weather the most. It significantly improves my mood and boosts my energy levels. The warmth also helps reduce my stress and anxiety. This kind of weather encourages me to be active and go outside. For example, I usually go walking, jogging, or play soccer with my friends. Sunny days make me feel positive and motivated to spend time outdoors.

Q-2: That's interesting. People often say their productivity or outlook changes depending on the weather. For example, some feel more motivated on sunny days while others find rain calming. Can you describe a specific day or event when the weather really had an impact on how you felt or what you were able to do?

Answer:

I remember a rainy day last winter when I had to stay home. Initially, I felt disappointed because I couldn't go out. However, the sound of rain was very calming. I decided to stay indoors, read a book, and drink hot tea. This weather helped me relax and focus on myself without any distractions. It turned into a peaceful day that reduced my stress significantly.

Q-3: In many places around the world, people are noticing more extreme weather, such as heat waves, storms, or sudden changes in temperature. Have you observed anything like that where you live? If so, how has it affected your lifestyle, your commute, or even your health?

Answer:

Yes, I have noticed more extreme heat waves in my city recently. The summers have become much hotter than before. This has definitely affected my daily lifestyle. For example, I now avoid going outside during the afternoon to prevent heat exhaustion. Also, my commute is uncomfortable because the car gets very hot. I have to drink more water and use air conditioning constantly to stay healthy and cool.

Q-4: One last question. As climate patterns shift, some believe that governments and local communities need to do more, whether that's building infrastructure to handle storms, planting trees to cool cities, or providing better public information. Do you think enough is being done? Why or why not?

Answer:

I do not think enough is being done yet. While some steps are taken, the effects of climate change are still severe. Governments need to invest more in infrastructure to handle storms and plant more trees to cool cities. Also, better public information is essential to keep people safe. We need stronger actions and stricter rules to protect our environment and ensure a safer future for everyone.

AD 7: You have volunteered to take part in a research study about people's experiences with reading clubs. You will have a short online interview with a researcher. The researcher will ask you some questions about your participation in or observations of reading clubs.

Q-1: Thank you for joining this study. First, I'd like you to think about the last time you joined a reading club that you don't usually attend (maybe a friend's club or a public library's temporary club). Why did you decide to join that specific reading club? What did you find most memorable about the experience?

Answer:

Last month, I joined a reading club at a public library because a friend recommended it. I decided to go to improve my English skills and meet new people. The most memorable part was discussing the book with strangers. Everyone had different opinions, which was very interesting. It helped me see the story from new perspectives. I really enjoyed the friendly atmosphere and learned a lot from the other members.

Q-2: Interesting. People have different feelings about reading clubs. Some find them inspiring—talking with others helps them see new perspectives on books. Others feel they're restrictive—group discussions sometimes limit their own understanding of a story. How do you feel about reading clubs? Why do you think you feel that way?

Answer:

I find reading clubs very inspiring. Meeting different people with diverse ideas and perspectives helps broaden my horizons. It allows me to see things I might miss when reading alone. Also, these discussions are informative and encourage me to study more. To participate well, I feel motivated to gather more information about stories and various subjects. This social aspect makes reading much more enjoyable and educational for me.

Q-3: Got it. Next, let's talk about opinions. Some people argue that reading clubs are more beneficial for young readers (teens or college students) than for older readers. They say young people need more guidance in critical thinking, which clubs provide. Do you agree with this view? Why or why not?

Answer:

I agree that reading clubs are very beneficial for young readers. Teenagers and college students often need guidance to develop their critical thinking skills. These clubs provide a great environment for them to learn how to express their opinions and listen to others. However, I also believe older readers can benefit. They can enjoy the social interaction and keep their minds active. So, while young people might need it more, it is good for everyone.

Q-4: Finally, many reading clubs struggle to keep members engaged long-term. What do you think a reading club could do to make people want to stay involved? Please give one or two specific ideas and explain why they might work.

Answer:

To keep members interested, the club should offer free snacks and drinks at meetings. Everyone enjoys eating while talking, so it creates a relaxed atmosphere. Also, choosing shorter books is a great idea. Long books can be difficult to finish, but short ones are easier and less stressful. These simple changes make the experience fun and manageable. When members feel relaxed and not pressured, they will definitely want to stay involved.

AD 8: You are applying to join a university club (debate, music, or volunteering, etc.). A club leader will ask you some questions to assess your fit.

Q-1: Thank you for coming today! We're excited to learn more about you. Let's start with some questions to see if you'd be a good fit for our club. First, let's talk about your interests. What hobbies or passions made you want to join this club? Share a personal experience related to these interests.

Answer:

Helping others makes me incredibly happy. When I see a smile on people's faces, I feel motivated to continue these tasks. I truly believe that small acts of kindness can make a big difference in our community. Joining this club will allow me to help more people and find others who share my passion for service. For example, last year I helped organize a food drive at my school. We collected meals for families in need.

Q-2: Great. Some students join clubs just for fun, while others believe clubs help build important skills. What's your view on this? Why?

Answer:

I believe clubs are essential for building important skills. They help us learn valuable life skills like teamwork and communication. For example, last year I volunteered at a tutoring club. I supported the children and managed the class schedule. I had to communicate with different people and work in a team. This experience also helped me create a strong network, which is very beneficial for my future career.

Q-3: OK. Next, clubs need teamwork. What do you think is the key to effective teamwork in a club? Give an example of how you'd contribute to it.

Answer:

I think the key to effective teamwork is good communication. Members must listen to each other and respect different opinions. I would contribute by being supportive and doing my share of the work. For example, if we have a project, I will help my teammates and encourage them when things are difficult. I believe that when we help each other and stay positive, we can achieve great results together.

Q-4: Good point. Sometimes, club members only spend time with friends they already know. Do you think it's important to meet and work with new people in the club? Why or why not?

Answer:

Yes, I think it is very important to meet new people in a club. Staying only with friends we already know limits our social circle. Working with new members helps us learn different perspectives and make new friends. It also prepares us for the future, where we must work with diverse groups. Therefore, interacting with everyone in the club creates a better environment and helps us grow personally and socially.

AD 9: You are participating in a research study about clothing and how it relates to personal identity, social trends, and lifestyle. You will have a short online interview with a researcher who will ask you a few questions.

Q-1: Thank you for joining us today. This study is about how people relate to clothing and personal style. I'll ask you a few questions to understand your habits and opinions. To start, how would you describe your approach to clothing? For example, do you dress mainly for comfort, fashion, work or something else?

Answer:

My approach to clothing depends on where I am going. If I have an important meeting with my boss, for example, I wear a suit and something serious. However, if I go out with family and friends, I choose comfortable clothes like sneakers, a T-shirt, and jeans. For me, comfort is always the first priority, but I still try to dress appropriately for every situation.

Q-2: That's helpful. Many people say that what they wear can affect their confidence or how others see them. Do you think clothing plays a role in self-expression or identity? Why or why not? And can you think of a time when an outfit made you feel particularly confident or out of place?

Answer:

Yes, I definitely think clothing plays a major role in identity. For example, when a doctor wears a uniform, people respect and trust him immediately. I remember a specific serious meeting where I wore a formal suit. Wearing that outfit made me feel very professional and confident. It changed how I acted and how others perceived me. So, I believe the right clothes can really boost our self-esteem.

Q-3: Fashion trends change quickly, especially with the influence of social media and influencers. Some people follow trends closely while others ignore them. What's your view on following fashion trends? Do you think trends help people be creative or do they put pressure on people to look a certain way?

Answer:

I believe that following trends helps people be creative. It allows us to understand new styles and try something different. By keeping up with trends, we can learn what is popular and then choose clothes that fit our personality. It is a fun way to experiment with our look. I think trends give us fresh ideas, so we can express ourselves better and feel more confident in what we wear.

Q-4: One last question. There's growing interest in sustainable and ethical fashion, buying secondhand, choosing eco-friendly brands, or shopping less often. Have you thought about how your clothing choices affect the environment or other people? Why or why not? And do you think this should be a bigger conversation in society?

Answer:

Yes, I have thought about how my choices affect the environment. Fast fashion creates a lot of waste, so I try to buy better quality clothes that last longer. I also believe this should be a bigger conversation in society. If more people understand the impact of their purchases, they might choose eco-friendly brands. We need to protect our planet, and sustainable fashion is a great way to start.

AD 10: You are taking part in a research study about ethics and responsibility in modern business. You will have a short online interview with a researcher who will ask you some questions.

Q-1: Thank you for agreeing to this interview. We're looking at how people view ethics and social responsibility in business. I'll ask you a few questions about your perspective. To start, when you think of a company that acts responsibly, what comes to mind? Can you name a business or describe specific practices that you consider ethical?

Answer:

When I think of a responsible company, I think of businesses that treat their employees fairly and protect the environment. For example, a company that pays good wages and uses eco-friendly materials is ethical to me. I also admire brands that donate a part of their profits to charity. These specific practices show that a company cares about people and the planet, not just about making money

Q-2: That's a good example. These days, many consumers expect companies to do more than just make money. They want transparency, fair treatment of workers, and attention to environmental impact. How important are these issues to you when choosing where to shop or work? Why?

Answer:

These issues are extremely important to me. When I want to purchase something, I try to choose companies that treat their employees fairly and use eco-friendly materials. These practices show that the companies care about people and the planet, and not just about making money. I prefer to support businesses that are responsible and ethical.

Q-3: Sometimes, companies face tough choices, like balancing profit with doing the right thing. Do you believe most businesses today are genuinely trying to be responsible, or are they mostly concerned with public image? Why do you feel that way?

Answer:

I believe most businesses are still mostly concerned with their public image. Many companies only act responsibly because they want to attract customers and avoid criticism. They spend more money on advertising their good deeds than actually solving problems. However, there are a few genuine businesses that truly care. But in my opinion, for the majority, profit and image are still the main priorities.

Q-4: Final question. Do you think governments or consumers should do more to hold businesses accountable for their actions? Why or why not? And what kinds of changes would you personally like to see in how companies operate?

Answer:

I think governments should do more to hold businesses accountable. We need stricter laws to protect the environment and workers. Consumers can also help by buying from responsible companies. Personally, I would like to see companies become more concerned with their employees and the environment. They should pay fair wages and stop polluting nature. If companies focus more on people and the planet instead of just profit, it will create a better future for everyone.
